A Sun-Based Framework for Islamic Prayer Times: An Analysis of Prophetic Practice from Sahih Hadith

Fajr Prayer: From True Dawn to Sunrise

The Fajr prayer represents the first of the five daily obligatory prayers and holds immense spiritual significance, being described as one of the heaviest upon the hypocrites [89] [136]. Its timing is strictly defined within a window that begins with the true dawn and concludes just before the sun ascends above the horizon. The foundation for this timing is rooted in clear descriptions of celestial phenomena, primarily drawn from authentic Quranic verses and corroborated by numerous hadith narrations. The starting point of the Fajr prayer time is not mere darkness but the appearance of a distinct whiteness across the eastern sky, known as Al-Fajr al-Sadiq (the true dawn). This phenomenon is explicitly referenced in the Quranic verse, "And eat and drink until the white thread of dawn becomes distinct to you from the black thread" [94] [95]. The "white thread" symbolizes this spreading light of dawn, while the "black thread" represents the preceding darkness of night [92] [269]. The Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ) was reported to have prayed Fajr when it was still dark, a state described as "ghalas," which further indicates that the prayer can be performed early in this window, even before the sky is fully illuminated [85] [107]. Some companions were known to pray so early that they would return home before the women who accompanied them, highlighting the proclivity towards performing Fajr at its earliest permissible moment [85].

The end of the Fajr prayer's time is clearly demarcated by the rising of the sun. Multiple authentic hadiths establish that the period immediately following the completion of the Fajr prayer is forbidden for formal prayer until the sun has fully risen [47] [48]. Narrations attributed to `Umar ibn al-Khattab and Abu Said` Al-Khudri explicitly state, "The Prophet forbade praying after the Fajr prayer till the sun rises" and "There is no prayer after the morning prayer till the sun rises" respectively [60] [285] [324] [349]. This prohibition is not merely an advisory caution but a direct command from the Prophet (ﷺ), reinforcing the sanctity of this transitional period between night and day. The Prophet's own consistent practice served as a living example of this ruling; he would refrain from offering any form of prayer during this time, thereby demonstrating its unlawfulness [101][179]. The precise moment that marks the conclusion of this forbidden period is also specified in the hadith literature. It is defined as the point when the sun has risen high enough to be seen comfortably without squinting, a height often described as "to the height of a spear above the horizon" [27][169]. This period is estimated to last approximately fifteen to twenty minutes after sunrise [13][29][188]. During this interval, the rays of the sun are still intense, making it difficult to look at, and it is only after they have lessened that the time for prayer reopens [28][346]. Therefore, the complete time range for the Fajr prayer extends from the onset of true dawn until the sun reaches the height of a spear. The best time to perform the obligatory Fajr prayer is at the very beginning of its prescribed window, shortly after the appearance of the true dawn but before the sky becomes overly bright [88]. This practice aligns with the Prophet's (ﷺ) reported actions and his encouragement to hasten to the congregational prayer [178]. Performing the prayer early allows for the fulfillment of its obligation before the demands of the new day begin to take precedence. While the entire window is valid, the initial part, known as Al-Ghalas (darkness mixed with whiteness), is considered the most virtuous time for its performance [88].

Dhuhr Prayer: From Zenith to Asr

The Dhuhr prayer is the second of the five daily obligatory prayers, and its timing is intricately linked to the sun's movement across the sky, specifically its passage through the meridian. The commencement of the Dhuhr prayer is marked by a precise physical sign: the sun has passed its highest point directly overhead. One of the most definitive hadiths describing this moment states that the time for Dhuhr begins "when the sun passes the meridian and a man's shadow is the same (length) as his height" [109][163][279]. This provides a clear, observable criterion for determining the start of the prayer's time. Another narration reinforces this by stating that the Prophet (ﷺ) would offer the Zuhr prayer "as soon as the sun declined (at noon)" [5][315][369]. These accounts establish that the instant the sun ceases to climb higher and begins its descent towards the west is the signal for the Dhuhr prayer to begin. The duration of the Dhuhr prayer continues uninterrupted until the time for the Asr prayer becomes due. The end of Dhuhr's time is therefore synonymous with the beginning of Asr's time, creating a seamless transition between the two obligatory prayers of the afternoon. The Prophet (ﷺ) is reported to have prayed Dhuhr promptly after the sun passed its zenith, indicating a strong preference for punctuality [5][253]. While there is no single hadith that designates a unique "best moment" within the Dhuhr time frame, the collective weight of the evidence points toward performing the prayer as soon as its time legally begins. This immediate action ensures that the obligatory act of worship is fulfilled without unnecessary delay, allowing the worshipper to proceed with their worldly affairs. Furthermore, a narration where the Prophet (ﷺ) advised delaying Dhuhr if the weather was extremely hot suggests that the ideal time balances ease and timeliness, but does not advocate for significant postponement [289].

A specific period surrounding midday is designated as forbidden for prayer, a rule established through explicit prohibition and the Prophet's consistent practice. This prohibited time occurs when the sun is at its zenith and for a short while thereafter. Hadith collections mention this period alongside other forbidden times, such as "When the sun is at its zenith, until it has passed its zenith" [8] [11]. Although the duration is brief, it is a sacred interval during which no prayer should be offered [14]. The Prophet (ﷺ) himself refrained from praying at this exact moment, setting a precedent for his followers [107]. This prohibition underscores the reverence for the natural cycles of the sun, particularly its peak position, and prevents the act of prostration from occurring at a time associated with great heat and the sun's apex in the sky. The opening of the Dhuhr prayer time is thus precisely defined by the sun passing its zenith, and its continuation is confirmed by the Prophet's (ﷺ) prompt performance of the prayer immediately thereafter. The subsequent period of forbidden prayer at the zenith reinforces the importance of adhering to the exact moments prescribed by the sun's position, rather than approximating or extending the prayer times arbitrarily.

Asr Prayer: From Shadow Length to Sunset

The Asr prayer, the third of the five daily obligatory prayers, begins in the afternoon and extends until sunset. Its timing is determined by the lengthening shadows cast by objects as the sun descends in the sky. The start of the Asr prayer is clearly delineated by a hadith that states, "when the sun passes the meridian and a man's shadow is the same (length) as his height" [109]. This moment follows immediately after the Dhuhr prayer has been completed. Another narration specifies the beginning of Asr as "when a man's shadow is twice his height" [296], though the more widely accepted and commonly cited starting point is when the shadow equals the object's height [108] [132] [197]. The Prophet (ﷺ) is reported to have prayed Asr at a time when the sun was still bright, indicating that the prayer can be performed relatively early in its window [6] [262] [264]. His practice of praying Asr when the sunshine was still inside a room, before any significant shadow had appeared, further supports the idea that the prayer can commence well before the sun becomes pale [199][200][266]. The end of the Asr prayer's time is unequivocally sunset. The Prophet (ﷺ) did not pray after the sun had set, and the time for Asr officially ends the moment the disc of the sun disappears below the horizon [358]. Delaying the Asr prayer until the very end of its permissible time is strongly discouraged. One authentic hadith warns against the "prayer of the hypocrite," which is described as being delayed until the sun is about to set, positioned "between the horns of Satan" [106]. This imagery serves as a powerful deterrent against procrastination in fulfilling this important obligation. The preferred time for Asr is therefore early in its window, immediately following the Dhuhr prayer. By performing Asr promptly, a worshipper demonstrates diligence and avoids the risk of missing the prayer altogether or performing it in a manner that is disapproved of by the Prophet (ﷺ).

Similar to the period after Fajr, there is a distinct and explicitly forbidden time for prayer that follows the Asr prayer. This prohibition is stated with absolute clarity in several sahih hadiths, which declare, "There is no prayer after the `Asr prayer till the sun sets" [285][324][349]. This commandment, attributed to the Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ), creates a sacred pause between the Asr prayer and the evening's final obligatory prayer. The reasoning behind this prohibition is rooted in the principle of honoring the sun's descent, a moment of great significance in the natural world. The Prophet's (ﷺ) own actions serve as the ultimate proof of this ruling; he consistently refrained from offering any prayer during this transitional period, from just after Asr until the sun had completely disappeared below the horizon [129]. This practice of abstention is itself a form of legislation, teaching the community that this specific interval is not to be used for acts of worship like formal prayer. The end of this forbidden time is marked by sunset, after which the time for Maghrib prayer opens. This prohibition reinforces the concept that prayer times are not arbitrary intervals but are divinely ordained moments tied to observable celestial events. By adhering to these boundaries, Muslims fulfill their obligations in the manner prescribed by the Prophet (ﷺ), ensuring that their worship is conducted with the utmost sincerity and correctness.

Maghrib Prayer: From Sunset to Disappearance of Redness

The Maghrib prayer, the fourth of the five daily obligatory prayers, holds a special place as the prayer of sunset. Its timing is anchored to the precise moment of sunset and extends for a considerable duration afterward, providing ample opportunity for its performance. The start of the Maghrib prayer time is unequivocally defined as the moment the sun's disc has fully disappeared below the horizon [124][125][126]. This is a clear and observable event that can be witnessed globally. The Prophet (ﷺ) is reported to have prayed Maghrib promptly at its stated time, right after the sun had set, demonstrating a commendable haste in performing this prayer [139]. This immediacy is considered a praiseworthy characteristic, as evidenced by his practice of hastening to break the fast immediately after sunset, a time closely associated with Maghrib [76] [387]. The time for Maghrib prayer is not limited to the moment of sunset alone; it continues for as long as the redness, known as shafaq, remains visible on the western horizon [71] [78] [212]. This period of lingering red glow is referred to as the "red twilight" [321]. The time for Maghrib lasts until this redness completely fades away [261][354]. Once the redness vanishes, the time for Maghrib expires, and the time for the Isha prayer begins [135][137]. Therefore, the complete time range for Maghrib spans from sunset until the disappearance of the red twilight. The best time to pray Maghrib is immediately after its start, without any undue delay. The Prophet (ﷺ) encouraged the swift performance of this prayer, and hastening to it is considered a virtuous act [384]. Performing Maghrib promptly allows one to fulfill their obligation and move into the evening hours with gratitude, as exemplified by the practice of breaking the fast immediately after sunset [387]. While the prayer can be performed throughout the entire duration of the red twilight, the most spiritually rewarding time is at the very beginning, coinciding with the sunset itself.

Isha Prayer: From End of Redness to Midnight

The Isha prayer, the fifth and final obligatory prayer of the day, begins after the completion of the Maghrib prayer and continues through the night until a specified time. Its start is clearly defined as the moment the redness of the western sky, known as shafaq ahmar, has completely disappeared [135][394][395]. This disappearance marks the transition from the Maghrib time window to the Isha time window. The end of the Isha prayer's time is explicitly and famously defined in a hadith narrated by 'A'ishah, in which she said, "One night, the Prophet (ﷺ) delayed the Isha prayer until a significant portion of the night had passed" [41]. Another narration from Ibn 'Umar confirms this limit, stating, "The Messenger of Allah (ﷺ) said: The time of the Isha prayer is until half of the night has passed" [1] [2] [3]. This hadith establishes midnight as the definitive endpoint for the Isha prayer. If a person has not prayed Isha by this time, they must do so, but it will no longer be considered Isha; instead, it will be classified as a missed obligatory prayer to be made up later. The Prophet (ﷺ) is reported to have often performed the Isha prayer later in the night, sometimes waiting until almost the middle of the night [186][340]. This practice indicates a preference for performing Isha later in its permissible time, making the latter part of the night the more virtuous window for its performance [111][112]. However, some reports suggest he disliked sleeping before the Isha prayer, implying that waking up for it is highly encouraged [110][258]. The time for Isha is thus expansive, beginning at the end of the red twilight and lasting until the midpoint of the night. The "best time" to pray Isha is therefore the latter part of this window, aligning with the Prophet's (ﷺ) demonstrated practice of delaying it for spiritual benefit.

Voluntary Forenoon Prayers: Ishraq and Duha (Chast)

Beyond the five obligatory prayers, the Sunnah of the Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ) includes several voluntary prayers, among which are Ishraq and Duha (also known as Chast in some regions). These prayers are offered during the forenoon and are highly recommended acts of worship. The time for these prayers begins after the sun has risen sufficiently to be comfortable to look at, a period that corresponds to the end of the forbidden time after sunrise. The hadith literature specifies this start time as "when the sun has risen to the height of a spear above the horizon" [25][169]. This description, identical to the marker for the end of the post-Fajr forbidden time, places the beginning of the Duha/Ishraq prayer window roughly fifteen to twenty minutes after sunrise [13][29][188]. The end of this voluntary prayer time is marked by the onset of the Dhuhr prayer time, which begins when the sun passes its zenith [20]. More specifically, the latest time for Duha is described as being "before the sun reaches its zenith" or "just before the time for Dhuhr prayer" [116][187]. Thus, the complete time range for Ishraq and Duha runs from approximately 15-20 minutes after sunrise until about 10-15 minutes before the Dhuhr prayer begins [21][116]. There is a nuanced relationship between Ishraq and Duha; Ishraq is often considered the name for the early part of the Duha prayer, specifically the prayer offered shortly after the sun has reached the height of a spear [23][171]. Duha, however, encompasses the entire forenoon window and is the broader term for this category of voluntary prayers [173]. The Prophet (ﷺ) was known to encourage this prayer, and it is reported that he performed eight rak'ahs of it on the day of the conquest of Makkah [62]. The best time to perform the Duha prayer is later in its window, when the earth is hot and the sun is high. The Prophet (ﷺ) reportedly said, "It is better to pray it when the earth is very hot" [18][40]. This indicates a clear preference for the latter part of the forenoon, when the sun's heat is most intense, suggesting that this is the most spiritually rewarding time for this voluntary act of worship. The minimum number of rak'ahs for Duha is two, but there is scholarly consensus that it can be extended [63] [334] [367]. The Prophet (ﷺ) narrated a profound reward for those who perform four rak'ahs at the beginning of the day, emphasizing its significance [155] [160].

Night Prayers: Tahajjud and Witr

The night offers a unique and sacred opportunity for worship, and the Sunnah prescribes two important prayers during this time: Tahajjud and Witr. Tahajjud is a voluntary night prayer performed after one has slept following the Isha prayer and before the Fajr prayer [56]. Its time range is therefore the latter part of the night. The start of its time is contingent upon having slept, and the end is just before the Fajr prayer begins [56]. The Prophet (ﷺ) established a clear hierarchy of virtue for the timing of Tahajjud. The most emphasized and spiritually potent time for this prayer is the last third of the night. Multiple authentic hadiths recount the divine promise that "Our Lord, the Blessed, the Superior, comes every night down on the nearest Heaven... when the last third of the night remains, saying: 'Is there anyone to invoke Me, so that I may respond to invocation?'" [66] [219] [222] [348]. This nightly descent of Allah makes supplication and prayer during this specific window exceptionally powerful and likely to be answered. The Prophet (ﷺ) structured his nights around this principle, reporting that he would sleep for half of the night, then pray for one third of the night, and finally sleep for the remaining sixth part [49] [53] [375]. This practice highlights the special status of the final portion of the night. While Tahajjud can be performed anytime after Isha until Fajr, the last third is unequivocally the best time. The Prophet (ﷺ) also encouraged waking up for Tahajjud after hearing the crowing of the cock, which is traditionally associated with the approach of Fajr time, further reinforcing the connection of this prayer with the latter part of the night [221].

Witr is another significant prayer of the night, often performed as the final act of worship before Fajr. Its time is flexible and extends from after the Isha prayer up until just before the Fajr prayer [81] [83]. The Prophet (ﷺ) is reported to have prayed Witr at various times throughout the night, from shortly after Isha to very late at night [170]. However, he consistently emphasized its positioning as the concluding prayer of the night. He repeatedly instructed his companions, "Make witr as your last prayer at night" [81] [82] [320]. This directive gives Witr a special status, sealing the worship of the night and serving as a transition into the next day. The Prophet (ﷺ) himself would often complete his night prayers with Witr at the time of dawn, solidifying its role as the final obligatory-like prayer [377][378]. The best time for Witr is therefore at the very end of the night, immediately following the Tahajjud prayer. Performing Witr late in the night is considered highly virtuous and aligns with the Prophet's (ﷺ) established practice. Witr is typically performed with an odd number of rak'ahs, with three being a common number, and it always concludes with a single rakah of Tashahhud. The combination of Tahajjud and Witr forms the pinnacle of night worship, with Tahajjud representing the main body of voluntary prayer and Witr serving as its solemn and powerful finale.

Summary Table of Prayer Times

The following table synthesizes the information derived exclusively from authentic hadith regarding the time ranges, best times, and forbidden periods for the nine specified Islamic prayers. The data presented is based on explicit textual evidence and the consistent practice of the Prophet Muhammad (ﷺ), focusing on sun-based indicators as described in the research goal.

Prayer	Time Range (Sun-Based)	Best Time	Reference
Fajr	Begins with the appearance of true dawn (Al-Fajr al-Sadiq) [92] [93] and ends when the sun rises to the height of a spear above the horizon [27] [169].	Immediately at the beginning of its time, when the sky is still dark (Al-Ghalas) [85] [88].	Sahih Muslim 612a-d [165]; Sahih Bukhari 577 [182]; Sahih Bukhari 582 [179].
Forbidden Time: After Fajr until Sunrise	From the moment the Fajr prayer is completed until the sun has risen to the height of a spear [13] [169].	Not Applicable	Sahih Muslim 831 [371]; Sahih Bukhari 586 [349]; Sahih Bukhari 577 [181].
Dhuhr	Begins when the sun passes its zenith and a man's shadow is equal to his height [109] [279] and ends when the Asr prayer time begins.	Shortly after its start time, as soon as the sun has passed its zenith [5] [253].	Sahih Muslim 612d [404]; Sahih Bukhari 560 [264].
Forbidden Time: At Solar Zenith	When the sun is at its highest point (meridian) and for a short time thereafter until it has passed [8] [11].	Not Applicable	Sahih Muslim 831 [371]; Sahih Bukhari 541 [101].
Asr	Begins when a man's shadow is equal to his height [45] [132] and ends at sunset [108].	Early in its time, immediately after its start [6] [262].	Sahih Muslim 612e [404]; Sahih Bukhari 545 [198].
Forbidden Time: After Asr until Sunset	From the moment the Asr prayer is completed until the sun sets [48] [349].	Not Applicable	Sahih Muslim 831 [371]; Sahih Bukhari 586 [349].
Maghrib	Begins at sunset [124] [125] and ends when the redness (shafaq) on the western horizon disappears [71] [78].	Immediately at the beginning of its time, right after sunset [139] [384].	Sahih Muslim 612a [165]; Sahih Bukhari 560 [264].
Isha	Begins when the redness (shafaq) on the western horizon disappears [135] and ends at midnight [1] [2].	Later in its time, after a significant portion of the night has passed [111] [112].	Sahih Muslim 612a [165]; Sahih Bukhari 581 [60].
Ishraq / Duha (Chast)	Begins when the sun has risen to the height of a spear [25] [169] and ends just before the Dhuhr prayer time [20].	In the latter part of its time, when the earth is hot and the sun is high [18] [40].	Sahih Muslim 720 [195]; Sahih Bukhari 1145 [66].
Tahajjud	Begins after one has slept following Isha and ends just before Fajr [56].	The last third of the night, when Allah descends to the lowest heaven [66] [219] [348].	Sahih Bukhari 646 ; Sahih Bukhari 652 [52].
Witr	Begins after Isha and can be performed until just before Fajr [81].	As the last prayer of the night, immediately following Tahajjud [81] [82].	Sahih Bukhari 998 [81]; Sahih Muslim 745a [378].
